PREFACE

The Russian collection of the Rare Book Department in the Howard-Tilton Memorial Library is actually an amalgamation of several different collections and sources. Between 1969 and 1971, Benjamin C. Toledano, a Tulane alumnus (LL. B., 1957), donated a collection of books to the library. These books ranged in subject from Don Quixote and art to European travel and history. Among the latter there were a number of books which pertained to Russian travel and history. With the arrival of Sylvia Verdun Metzinger as Rare Books Librarian in 1981, these books became the core of what is now known as the Romanov Russia History and Travel collection. Along with previous library holdings, and a number of significant purchases based on the nucleus of the Toledano donation, Howard-Tilton can boast of a fine research collection in the area of Russian studies of the Romanov era. Over the years, Ms. Metzinger has coordinated several exhibits of these fine holdings, including "Romanov Russia: Description and History" in 1981 and "Romanov Russian Architecture" in 1984.

This guide goes beyond the Romanov Russia History and Travel collection to include all books located in the Howard-Tilton Memorial Library Rare Book Department which pertain to the study of Russian history, literature and culture. Most of these books deal with the tsarist period, but there are some which refer to the early Soviet period. Because of their historical significance, I have also included as an addendum a number of Soviet war posters located in the Manuscripts Department of the Howard-Tilton Memorial Library.
